

Home / Blog / La Traviata

04-16-2018 | 0 COMMENTS | VICTOR CORDELL

Violetta's party scene. Amanda Kingston as Violetta (in white gown, seated center), Pene Pati as Alfredo (standing right, toasting)

As Larry Hancock, General Director of Opera San José, notes, its financial vitality depends largely on presenting two of the ten most popular operas each year. So the math suggests that we can expect to see each of those war horses once every five years. Fortunately, there are good reasons that some operas are so appealing and can be enjoyed so often.

One of those top ten most popular works in all of opera, La Traviata, is a study in contrast. Acclaimed for its glorious party scenes, it is otherwise an intimate chamber opera about love, loss, and regret that tugs at the heartstrings. It also contrasts social class, and despite whatever moral issues that some might have, evokes sympathy for a consumptive, but loving and generous courtesan. Opera San José offers a handsome realization this Verdi masterpiece.

Amanda Kingston as Violetta, Malcolm MacKenzie as Giorgio.

1. La Traviata
2. The Bridges of Madison County
3. Timon of Athens
4. The Effect
5. Iron Shoes
6. The Wolves
7. Exit the King
8. Cowboy versus Samurai
9. Dead Man's Cell Phone
10. Hooded, or Being Black for Dummies

- April 2018 (3)
- March 2018 (9)
- February 2018 (9)
- January 2018 (7)
- December 2017 (7)
- November 2017 (6)
- October 2017 (9)
- September 2017 (6)
- August 2017 (9)
- July 2017 (4)
- June 2017 (7)
- May 2017 (4)
- April 2017 (8)
- March 2017 (3)
- February 2017 (4)
- January 2017 (5)
- December 2016 (5)
- November 2016 (4)
- October 2016 (6)
- September 2016 (4)
- August 2016 (5)
- July 2016 (2)
- June 2016 (5)
- May 2016 (6)
- April 2016 (2)
- March 2016 (2)
- February 2016 (8)
- January 2016 (6)

The courtesan, Violetta, is one of the most challenging soprano roles in the repertory, and Amanda Kingston rises to the occasion. The lower part of her range seems somewhat underpowered, but her handling of the more important coloratura passages is brilliant, with great precision over rapid runs and trills. Throughout, she is charged with alternating from optimistically cheerful to sickly and worried, and she conveys Violetta's moods and vulnerabilities with great aplomb.

The opera resounds with familiar music, soaring from the opening moments. Kingston and Pene Pati, as her lover Alfredo, excel in the uplifting brindisi, or toasting song, "Libiamo, ne' lieti calici" as well as in the haunting duet "Un di felice." Pati's slightly lilting tenor possesses fine color and clarity and is delivered with seeming ease. He also offers a beaming visage and a compelling stage presence.

Masquerade Ball.

The configuration of the principal parts in La Traviata is unusual. Three roles totally dominate the action. In addition to the two lovers, the third is the father of the male lover. Giorgio Germont, Alfredo's father, is a recurring presence who intercedes to terminate the relationship. Malcolm MacKenzie's penetrating baritone fits the glower and indignation of his role. However, his highlight is the lovely reminiscence "Di Provenza il mar." In hopes of easing Alfredo away from the high life of Paris and the opprobrium that marrying Violetta would bring to the family name, he waxes nostalgic to his son about heritage and the family home in Provence,

At first blush, it seems easy to dislike Giorgio for interfering with the romance of two adults, but we can certainly understand the stain associated with a kept woman marrying into a respectable family, with all its consequences. Over time, Giorgio reveals complexity of character and keen observation of Violetta. MacKenzie's noteworthy ambivalence soon appears, so that we sympathize with Giorgio's conflictedness and appreciate his ultimate contrition.

A single set depicts the various venues of the action, with minor adjustments for scene changes. This execution works well, as the core staging is strong. The overall look of the second act masquerade ball particularly appeals, especially with its formal costuming. The scene is arresting when the men's chorus in tuxedos stand erect on a raked section of the stage while the women in beautifully coordinated gold and red toned gowns are huddled on the lower section.

La Traviata represents the culmination of Verdi's vaunted middle period, with its composition period overlapping that of its oft considered

Pene Pati as Alfredo, Amanda Kingston as Violetta.

December 2015 (5)
 November 2015 (3)
 October 2015 (3)
 September 2015 (3)
 August 2015 (5)
 July 2015 (1)

artistic mate, Il Trovatore. They share Verdi's increasing abandonment of the artistically stifling strictures of past operatic form, such as opening an opera with a chorus and following an aria by a cabaletta. Highly melodic music abounds in both operas. For the greater part, each has its distinct sound, yet the Spanish-tinged gypsy chorus divertissement in La Traviata's masquerade ball matches better with Il Trovatore's musical vernacular.

In any case, La Traviata contains the right formula of beautiful music, stirring drama, and grand settings to make it a beloved opera. This production exhibits qualities that fulfill the opera's promise with sparkling gaiety in group scenes and tender emotions in intimate ones to produce a pleasing whole.

La Traviata, composed by Giuseppe Verdi with libretto by Francesco Maria Piave is produced by Opera San José and plays at The California Theatre, 345 South First St., San Jose, CA through April 29, 2018.

another review by
Victor Cordell
Performing Arts Reviewer
ForAllEvents
your source for Bay Area Arts & Culture

The banner features a portrait of Victor Cordell on the left, wearing a purple beret and glasses. The background is blue with white and yellow text.

categories: VICTOR CORDELL

Victor Cordell publishes theater and opera reviews on www.forallevents.com and www.berkshirefinearts.com. Having lived in New York, London, Hongkong, Sydney, Washington DC, Houston, Monterey, and elsewhere, he has enjoyed performing arts of many ilks world wide. His service involvement has been on the boards of directors of three small opera companies (Monterey, San Francisco Lyric, and Island City) and a theater company (Cutting Ball). He is a member of San Francisco Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle and American Theatre Critics Association as well as being a Theatre Bay Area adjudicator. His career was divided between international banking and academe, most recently as a professor at the Monterey Institute of International Studies and an administrator at San Francisco State University. Victor holds a Ph.D. in marketing from the University of Houston.

View all posts by Victor Cordell →

Name *

Email *

Website

